The Food

Curry Culture's cuisines are inspired by the home style cooking from foothills of the Himalayas to the warm sea of the coast of India. Every individual dishes are perfectly balanced with the different level of spices giving an opportunity to taste the flavour and texture, rather than just the heat of spices.

There's no cooking like home cooking and this is especially true of India. Despite the spectacular spread of the cuisine around the world, the food cooked in the traditional homes of India is still reckoned to be the best and moreover, given the size of India and its millions of traditional homes, the unity in the diversity of this food is remarkable.

In simple language our food is freshly cooked authentic, appetising, wholesome and healthy.

The front of house team is lead by the Owner / Manager, who has gained many years of management experience working in an award winning Mela Groups and the Michelin-starred Indian restaurant Zaika in Central London. Lovely, smart restaurant with oodles of space (not immediately visible) and an excellent, varied menu. Hoping to go back soon!

Prices were probably a little above average for the area, but the food was definitely above average and worth it imo.

The loos were smart and clean too. The gloss black marble type wall panels were a little disconcerting, but the overall effect was good.

Groupon Reviews

"We would like to thank you and your staff for making our evening a very good one, the food and service was excellent and the fact you was willing to pick us up when we had trouble finding you was a very nice desture, so if any one out there is looking for an Indian restaurant in or around Uxbridge try Curry Culture I think you may be surprised, we will most certainly be going back."

Found this restaurant through the Taste Card app. Bonus - they accept it on a Saturday night! The food and service were both brilliant and the restaurant is very clean looking and modernly decorated. Will certainly my be back and would definitely recommend.

Fancied a curry, so gave this a try. Interesting, varied, menu, with a mix of Indian and other cuisines (not sufficiently knowledgeable to say where from). Staff and service excellent. Lots of Asian folk in the restaurant/bar and they say that's a good sign! My only criticism would be that I was facing the windows, which are very very high, and, without any softening blinds (or similar) are a bit stark, making that part of the restaurant a bit like a works canteen.....apart from that, a good local restaurant. Recommended!

We tried Curry Culture on a Groupon deal. The place is easy to find & there is a carpark just behind the building which is free after 5pm. The entrance is up a gentle ramp so wheelchair access is good. A major plus point is that they serve 'proper' lager, not just the usual offerings. While Fosters amber nectar may not be everyone's first choice, it is very much better than the alternative, IMO. The decor was a surprise, last year's (or maybe next year's!) Christmas lights and baubles. That aside, the restaurant is light & airy with plenty of room between the tables.

The cuisine appears mainly Nepalese, with Indian & some Chinese influence so the food is definitely tasty. I found some of the dishes unfamiliar but the waiter explained. The portions are pretty impressive too, the starters being the size of other restaurants' main courses. This is definitely the place to go for a good feed. The staff were very pleasant and helpful, tap water was provided on demand & I was offered extra bread without having to ask. Overall, very good and we will be back.
