Add Warmth to Your Home with Windows and Conservatories

Annfield Windows and Conservatories

What Are Conservatories?

Also known as sunrooms, these are attached structures to the house, usually on one side if it is a residence, and are built of glass walls and roofs. The roofs can alternately be made of tarpaulin or polycarbonate material. They trap the heat of the Sun, and transform the room into a beautiful heated space. Sunrooms are a very common and preferred structure, which can be built within a very small amount of space and can be put to various kinds of uses.

Uses of Conservatories

They are used as greenhouses or sunrooms, to grow plants, and have other utilities like serving as a sun lounge, or a pet room.

Conventionally, they are used as a place to grow plants and spend time under the Sun with your family, especially during the summers. People have also made unconventional use of this extra space, turning it into a dining room, a playroom for children, a home gym, and even into an extra bedroom. Conservatories have an endless amount of utilities and possibilities in today's time.
